CONSIDER THE LITTLE ONES

Let your mind wander back a few years—bring up the pictures of infancy to your eyes—apply them to the lives of the little ones of today. They need your consideration.

With the advent of warm days an irresistible longing for the open air fills the heart of the child.

It is but out of the demands of nature seeking its logical outlet. Life is sweet to them, and the sunshine is one of the brightest spots of life.

Let them bask in it. Let them breathe the pure air, for the oxygen thus obtained strengthens their lungs and adds ruggedness to their young constitutions.

Buy them soft balls and encourage them to catch and pitch them. Every throw—every catch—exercises, and strengthens, and develops the growing and forming muscles.

Let them run, and romp, and play. Encourage them in all wholesome sports, lest a stunted growth in infancy retard their progress in after life.

Every hour at play—every moment in the sunshine and in the open air—means better health, a stronger intellect, and a more manly and womanly physique.

But think of something besides their physical being. Consider their mental development—give heed to their moral surroundings—enhance the pleasures of their daily life with a wholesome diet of good cheer.

Do not ignore them when you meet. A pleasant word said or a kind deed done to a little one has been known to last throughout life itself, furnishing a green spot in memory which never fades.

Gradually impress upon their minds the fact that they are to be the man and woman of the coming generation—that the world will be as they make it—that their progress of today will indicate their status later in life.

Teach them the value of truth, and let them understand that a lie is the abomination of all honorable people.

Avoid harshness and neglect. Keep a smile on their lips and joy in their eyes, for the facial expressions of infancy are often carried through life.

Instill into their little hearts the gladness of knowledge that you are not the stern parent, but rather the loving companion, friend, confidante, and playmate.

Teach them the value of respect for their elders, that in after years they may command the respect of others.

Keep them in the sunshine and the open air, for sun and air are the greatest physicians of the universe.

Remember that they are young, and easily influenced, and that they have feelings as easily hurt as your own.

Treat them as you yearned to be treated when you were a child. It is a little thing for you to do, but its influence upon posterity is beyond compute.

THE PLACE OF GORGAS

A Goethals was less indispensable to the success of the Panama canal undertaking than was a Gorgas. Had General Goethals been ten times the genius that he proved himself to be, his efforts might conceivably have been defeated without those of General Gorgas.

Without the work which General Gorgas did, the canal would have exacted a toll of life so heavy as might have constrained the country into an abandonment of the project. That the country has not given this rank of primacy to the services of General Gorgas is due to the fact that it is prodigal of nothing so much as of human life. It is due to its inability to appreciate how greatly preventable are most of those diseases that are more destructive of life than armies are. And in this fact one may find a reason for hoping that General Gorgas will decline the invitation that has been extended to him.

A people who has still so much to learn, both as to the importance and feasibility of sanitation, have so heavy a need of a Gorgas that the prospect of losing his services must occasion a regret that cannot be compensated by the pride which it must feel in having this high honor conferred on him.—Dallas News.

The Buddhists are the most numerous of the religious groups of mankind, numbering some 500,000,000, as against some 200,000,000 Mohammedans, 80,000,000 Hindoos, 400,000,000 Christians, 250,000,000 Confucianists, and about 200,000,000 "pagans," or "heathens."

The United States presents a strong anomaly anent the European war by praying for peace on Sunday and selling bullets the rest of the week.

SOME PERTINENT REFLECTIONS

All hail to peace—when it gets here.

Do it today—tomorrow is a long way off.

America's duty is to America. Do your duty!

China is ailing, with Dr. Jap administering the "cure."

The robins are with us again—as likewise the hobo.

Austria balks at our neutrality. Possibly she would prefer our bullets.

Talk business—make business—and your arms will infold prosperity.

Did you ever notice the fidelity of a good dog? An object lesson to some men.

A good woman commands a man's respect, but it takes a doll to make him prance.

We commend the modesty of Jess Willard. He declines to usurp the whole front page.
